Latin

The Department of Classics offers course work in the language, history, literature, archaeology and culture of ancient Rome. At the heart of these courses are classes in the Latin language. Students of beginning Latin master the grammar in two semesters and go on immediately, in the third semester, to read authors such as Cicero and Vergil. Students who have studied Latin in high school begin with a placement exam, and many can begin their studies in more advanced courses. Students have the opportunity to study numerous Latin authors, including the great poets Vergil and Ovid, the historians Livy and Tacitus, and the novelists Apuleius and Petronius. More advanced undergraduates often work alongside graduate students in our vigorous graduate program; and they also have the opportunity to do their own research or to assist in faculty members' research projects. It is a remarkable and dynamic environment, one that the students find both rewarding and stimulating. Resources on campus supporting the study of Latin include the Wulfing Coin Collection, one of the largest collections of ancient coins owned by an American university.

Additional Information

Study Abroad: Study abroad for a semester in Rome or Athens is an option many Classics majors select. Washington University is a member of the Intercollegiate Center for Classical Studies (ICCS) consortium, and many majors attend the one-semester ICCS program in Rome. A knowledge of Latin or Greek to at least the intermediate level is required for admission to the Rome program. Students interested in studying at the Intercollegiate Center in Rome should consult Professor Tim Moore. Students interested in the College Year in Athens Program should consult Professor Robert Lambertson.
