Medieval and Renaissance Studies

Interested students may pursue a minor in Medieval and Renaissance studies or a major in Renaissance studies under the auspices of the Interdisciplinary Project in the Humanities (IPH). The major offers students the opportunity to gain a broad understanding of the early modern world — the seedbed of modern Western civilization — through the integrated study of Renaissance literature, history, philosophy, art history and music. (A full description of the requirements for completing the Renaissance studies track in the IPH may be found in the general listing for the IPH [http://bulletin.wustl.edu/undergrad/artsci/interdisciplinaryprojectinthehumanities/].)

Courses are drawn from a wide range of departments. This allows students to develop their own course of study, to select areas of concentration that are of particular personal interest, and to work closely with faculty from different areas. Students study the themes and social issues of the period through art, history, literature and popular culture. Topics examined include the rise of urban life, the flowering of vernacular languages and new literary genres, the growing emphasis on education, the reconception of pictorial representation and architectural space, the expression and subversion of power in politics and culture, and the transformation of religious doctrines and institutions.

Majors

Students seeking a major concentration in Medieval or Renaissance Studies are advised to pursue it under the aegis of either the Interdisciplinary Project in the Humanities (http://bulletin.wustl.edu/undergrad/arts/interdisciplinaryprojectinthehumanities/) or one of the other departments or programs in the humanities. They should achieve foreign language competency in French, Spanish, German, Italian, Latin, Arabic or Greek, and they are strongly urged to pursue their studies across several departments and programs.

Minors

The Minor in Medieval and Renaissance Studies

Total units required: 18

The minor in Western Medieval Studies and the minor in Renaissance Studies have the same structure. Students must complete two years of college-level language study in Spanish, French, Italian, Latin, German, Arabic or Greek, and they are encouraged to continue their foreign-language study further. They are expected to take six additional courses; three should come from the following list:

Students interested in pursuing the minor in Medieval and Renaissance Studies should contact the offices of the Interdisciplinary Project in the Humanities (http://iph.wustl.edu/).

Additional Information

Students must also take three courses in either Medieval or Renaissance Studies (depending on the concentration chosen) from at least two different departments or programs. Students will select these three courses in consultation with their minor adviser: Michael Sherberg (https://rl.wustl.edu/people/michael-scherberg/) for Western Medieval Studies or Joseph Loewenstein (https://english.wustl.edu/people/joe-loewenstein/) for Renaissance Studies.
